Re: Site Inspection, Larson Limestone Quarry, M/049/011

On January 19, 1988 I visited the Larson Limestone Quarry and spoke at length with the owner, Jerry Larson. According to Mr. Larson, the mine was shutdown in 1974 and had been idle until he started operations three years ago. Mr. Larson bought the site from the Small Business Administration who had acquired it through a foreclosure.

The current operation consists of crushing and hauling the overburden which had been stripped by the previous operator. The rock is used primarily by powerplants which further crush the product before using it. It is also used in road chips by the Department of Transportation. The operation qualifies for a rock aggregate exemption under the proposed rules and Mr. Larson will not be required to submit a Notice of Intent at this time.
